SINCE 1896
CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY of Washington

Throughout Children's Home Society of Washington's nearly 120-year-old history, we have always remained on the cutting edge of what is needed for children and families.

Even from the late 1890s, when we supported legislation that addressed child abuse and neglect, we always put children and families first.

As the decades progressed, we changed our programs and locations to be there for the families who needed us the most, and as we enter 2015, we are committed to maintaining our reputation as the premier service provider for children and families in Washington state.

This has been no small task. This past summer, we moved our 100-year-old headquarters in the Ravenna neighborhood to the vibrant and diverse neighborhood of Seattle's Lake City, so we could be closer to the families we serve.

In spring, the former Auburn Family Resource Center staff was relocated to the remodeled and expanded Kent location and renamed the South King County Family Resource Center. We also opened a new mental health office within the Northeast Community Center, the first of its kind in North Spokane.

Coinciding with all these dynamic changes, CHSW Board of Trustees in partnership with Children's Trust Foundation launched the Children's Home Society & Trust Foundation.

The capital earned from the sale of CHSW's headquarters and long-standing support from donors and partners provide the new foundation with a strong financial base.

The new entity will support CHSW's programs and services and also continue the vision of Children's Trust Foundation—established in 1982 by child advocates—by providing grants to other community-based family support centers dedicated to child abuse prevention. Grants will be made from the endowed funds contributed by Children's Trust Foundation.

In 2015, we will see continued growth and prosperity, including early learning partnership grants designed to expand and improve our Early Head Start programs in King, Spokane and Walla Walla counties.

In this year's annual report, we are excited to share with you our remarkable year that was made possible by our donors, community partners and tireless staff and volunteers. With your help, we are staying ahead of the curve in offering services that help children and families reach their full potential.

When a child walks in the door needing services, CHSW helps not just the child, but the family as a whole.

An adoption agency at its inception, CHSW has become a nationally recognized organization for comprehensive prevention services that reach children and their parents in order to keep them out of the public child welfare system.

One key component of this transition has been a growing focus on high-quality early learning services. Head Start began in 1965 as a result of Lyndon B. Johnson's War on Poverty, and in 1994, the program expanded to include Early Head Start. CHSW was one of the initial grantees for comprehensive Early Head Start, including family support services.

Now, CHSW serves pregnant women and low-income children from ages four weeks to five years old and their families in Head Start and Early Head Start, where trained educators help children build their cognitive, language, motor and social skills so they excel in kindergarten. These children and families receive comprehensive wraparound services that help families grow and learn together.

Providing a comprehensive network of care remains the cornerstone of CHSW's services. From child and family counseling services to parent education as well as foster care and adoption, the whole family receives support when participating in a CHSW program.

Focusing on whole family's needs

Through research and practice, CHSW understands that these vital services are most effective when addressing the challenges facing both children and parents at the same time. Families are more likely to get on the path toward success and stay there.

In 2014, CHSW was selected as one of 58 organizations identified through a highly competitive process to join the Aspen Institute's Ascend Network, a network of leading organizations using two-generation approaches that look at the whole family's needs in an effort to disrupt poverty and create economic mobility.

Thanks to a grant from the Annie E. Casey Foundation, CHSW will expand its work around two-generational strategies in 2015 and will support 50 low-income families in CHSW's home visiting program to set and work toward goals that improve the family's economic security and stability such as improved credit history, educational opportunities and career progress.

Developing innovative approaches to care

This ever-growing focus on innovation work and best practice services continues to advance under the Catalyst for Kids Policy and Research Office, which will help develop innovative approaches that benefit children as well as their parents not just in early learning, but also CHSW's other core service areas—counseling, foster care, adoption and family support.

This work is already being done in partnership with the Center on the Developing Child at Harvard University. In 2011, the center launched Frontiers of Innovation, which brings together the private and public sector to create new, science-based strategies to help vulnerable young children and their families. CHSW was one of the first organizations in North America to test pilot interventions as part of this initiative.

Through work with the Center on the Developing Child, CHSW has been able to learn more about trauma and brain development. When a young child is constantly exposed to stressful situations without protection from a supportive adult, brain architecture weakens with damaging lifelong effects on learning, behavior and health. Research shows that children can get through difficult times if adults give them a sense of security and model good coping skills.

Because of groundbreaking trauma research, CHSW has taken a stronger approach in interconnecting services such as when a child who has experienced trauma enrolls in a counseling program. Their parents or caregivers also participate in the healing process by attending counseling sessions and also gain access to parent support groups or parent education classes offered by CHSW.

Helping every child thrive

After nearly 120 years of service, CHSW remains on the cutting edge of care for children and families. Thanks to partnerships with Harvard University, Aspen Institute, Casey Foundation and others, CHSW continues to expand high-quality services and programs that truly make an impact in the lives of children and families.

CHSW benefits from the support of countless individuals, foundations, corporate sponsors and tireless staff and volunteers who believe that all children and families can succeed in life.

For CHSW and its supporters, the work does not cease until every child thrives.

A foundation of family support

As a single mother, Dawn Stockton was juggling the role of caretaker, student and employee.

She enrolled in Green River Community College in Auburn to pursue a degree in nursing while her children attended Early Head Start and Head Start at CHSW's Green River Child Development Center (GRCDC). There, the family became close with the staff and faculty, who provided encouragement, support, meals and even hugs.

"With their children being cared for close by, Green River students can fully focus on their studies," said GRCDC Director Sandy Cameron.

Having graduated in August 2013, Dawn is now working toward earning a bachelor's in nursing and hopes to become a forensic nurse. While Dawn continues to excel, her children are following in her footsteps—Xavier is now a seventh grader, Lailah is getting straight A's in her fourth-grade class and Sebastian is flourishing in kindergarten.
